

The interim US-Iran peace deal was a key highlight for market performance¹. Asia equities posted strong gains alongside the US technology sector. Oil prices fell below $80/bbl while the USD strengthened after new US Federal Reserve (Fed) chair Kevin Warsh took a hawkish tilt. There was strong allocation² into US equities with a focus on tech and growth exposures. In fixed income, flows were directed into USD corporate and emerging market (EM) debt.

EMERGING MARKETS: BETWEEN THE INDEX LINES

- EM equities – much to like, much to watch: EM equities have delivered strong returns¹, driven by South Korea and Taiwan's AI-led rally. Valuations are attractive vs developed markets (DM), but the Fed's hawkish pivot could be a headwind.
- China equities – same country, different story: MSCI China has sharply underperformed¹ the EM bloc this year, weighed down by its strong tilt on offshore stocks. Onshore A-shares were supported by stronger AI-related sector exposure.

Emerging Markets: between the index lines

EM equities have delivered strong returns¹ since the beginning of the year, buoyed by advances in artificial intelligence, high commodity prices, government stimulus, and a broadly weaker US dollar through much of 1H 2026. EM economies continue to benefit from a persistent and durable growth premium over DM, while valuations remain attractive in both absolute and relative terms.

That said, the picture is far from uniform. Headline returns masks a high degree of concentration. Stripping out South Korea and Taiwan's contribution, the rest of the complex is a net drag. The June Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting added to this uncertainty, delivering a hawkish tone that partially reverses the weaker dollar narrative that had supported EM through much of the year. Against this backdrop, we examine where the challenges and opportunities lie across the EM complex — and why, within China, share class selection may matter as much as country allocation.

EM equities: much to like, much to watch

EM equities have delivered strong returns¹ since the beginning of the year (MSCI EM: +28.7% net total return in USD), buoyed by advances in AI, high commodity prices, government stimulus, and a broadly weaker US dollar through much of 1H 2026. However, the performance¹ has been highly concentrated: South Korea (+133.4%) and Taiwan (+67.7%) together contributed approximately 54.6pp of the headline gain¹ via the global AI and semiconductor cycle. But without these market segments, the index looks quite different. Despite this concentration, valuations remain attractive relative to DM and the EM growth premium is significant and durable. For instance, the IMF forecasts that China — MSCI EM's third largest weight after Taiwan and South Korea — will remain the top contributor to global growth through 2028, with EM GDP growth projected at 4.2% in 2026 versus sub-2% for most DMs.

However, the macro backdrop has changed since the start of the year, as the weaker-dollar narrative has been partly reversed by the hawkish tone of the June FOMC meeting. While the Fed held rates at 3.50–3.75%, the dot plot now implies a possible hike, with nine of 18 officials pencilling in at least one move higher for this year. A stronger dollar tightens USD credit conditions, constrains EM central bank easing room, and amplifies market corrections in deficit economies — Indonesia and the Philippines being the most exposed. Bank Indonesia has already hiked its policy rate by 75bp and drawn down over 7% of its total FX reserves since December. By contrast, South Korea, Taiwan, and China carry far lower external financing risk thanks to their current account surpluses, making them better insulated from the Fed's hawkish pivot.

China Equities: same country, different story

Within China, the picture is more nuanced than the headline index suggests, with share class selection being the defining performance¹ driver in 2026. The MSCI China Index — dominated by offshore-listed securities (Hong Kong-listed H-shares, Red Chips, and US-listed American Depositary Receipts) — is down -11.4% YTD¹, heavily underperforming¹ the broader MSCI EM Index. Weakness in domestic demand, regulatory headwinds on internet platforms, and a rotation into onshore AI-oriented equities were amongst dampeners to performance. Moreover, the index significantly underrepresents the onshore market: A-shares make up only 20% of the index free float market capitalisation. Near-term technical pressure adds to the challenges — approximately US$32.5bn worth of shares from recent Hong Kong IPOs and secondary offerings are set to exit their lock-up periods in July, the largest monthly expiry for the remainder of 2026, potentially flooding the market with new supply at a time of weak demand.

By contrast, MSCI China A — which tracks onshore renminbi-denominated stocks listed in Shanghai and Shenzhen — has gained +10.7% YTD¹. The performance¹ gap reflects an active reallocation from investors into domestically-listed, AI-oriented companies — the primary driver of A-share market performance¹ this year. Offshore markets, on the other hand, have borne the brunt of foreign outflows and regulatory uncertainty. The two indices are also structurally differentiated by sector composition: MSCI China A carries a greater tilt toward industrials and technology hardware, whereas the H-share market is more heavily weighted toward financials, internet, and consumer services. Despite its outperformance¹, MSCI China A still lags broader EM benchmarks, suggesting the onshore re-rating has further room to run.

Overall, Asia remains a key engine of growth in EM. AI-related memory demand is driving hardware earnings growth, offering AI exposure at lower valuations than the US and underpinning the index's strong YTD return¹ — concentrated in South Korea and Taiwan. The Fed's recent hawkish pivot could shift the advantage toward markets with strong external balances and profit-driven earnings growth. While we maintain a neutral stance on China at the index level, onshore A-shares could offer room for further upside, supported by a more AI-aligned sector composition and their structural underrepresentation within the MSCI China Index.

Knowing your risk

It is important for potential investors to evaluate the risks described below and in the fund's Key Investor Document ("KID") and prospectus available on our website www.amundiETF.com.

CAPITAL AT RISK

ETFs are tracking instruments. Their risk profile is similar to a direct investment in the underlying index. Investors' capital is fully at risk and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

UNDERLYING RISK

The underlying index of an ETF may be complex and volatile. For example, ETFs exposed to Emerging Markets carry a greater risk of potential loss than investment in Developed Markets as they are exposed to a wide range of unpredictable Emerging Market risks.

REPLICATION RISK

The fund's objectives might not be reached due to unexpected events on the underlying markets which will impact the index calculation and the efficient fund replication.

COUNTERPARTY RISK

Investors are exposed to risks resulting from the use of an OTC swap (over-the-counter) or securities lending with the respective counterparty(-ies). Counterparty(-ies) are credit institution(s) whose name(s) can be found on the fund's website amundiETF.com. In line with the UCITS guidelines, the exposure to the counterparty cannot exceed 10% of the total assets of the fund.

CURRENCY RISK

An ETF may be exposed to currency risk if the ETF is denominated in a currency different to that of the underlying index securities it is tracking. This means that exchange rate fluctuations could have a negative or positive effect on returns.

LIQUIDITY RISK

There is a risk associated with the markets to which the ETF is exposed. The price and the value of investments are linked to the liquidity risk of the underlying index securities. Investments can go up or down. In addition, on the secondary market liquidity is provided by registered market makers on the respective stock exchange where the ETF is listed. On exchange, liquidity may be limited as a result of a suspension in the underlying market represented by the underlying index tracked by the ETF; a failure in the systems of one of the relevant stock exchanges, or other market-maker systems; or an abnormal trading situation or event.

VOLATILITY RISK

The ETF is exposed to changes in the volatility patterns of the underlying index relevant markets. The ETF value can change rapidly and unpredictably, and potentially move in a large magnitude, up or down.

CONCENTRATION RISK

ETFs can select a large portion of their assets in a particular issuer, industry, stocks or type of bonds, country or region for their portfolio. Where selection rules are extensive, it can lead to a more concentrated portfolio where risk is spread over fewer stocks. Where selection rules are extensive, it can lead to a more concentrated portfolio where risk is spread over fewer stocks. This can mean both higher volatility and a greater risk of loss.
